Executives, managers and employees throughout finance and other corporate departments are increasingly called upon to develop an accurate picture of a company's financial performance and health. Business owners considering potential acquisitions or partnerships, and individual investors must also be able to make sense of financial statements.

Most people are not accountants, however. And books on the subject tend to be accounting-heavy and difficult to get through. But now a solution for non-accountants takes the mystery out of financial statements. Five-Minute Financial AnalystSM provides comprehensive online training plus a critical tool for “instantly” analyzing a company's key financial data and gaining both a business and personal edge.

Learn with plain language and get powerful results.

Five-Minute Financial AnalystSM is designed for people with little or no accounting knowledge. In plain language, your online instructor explains each component of the financial statement. You learn to identify, understand and use financial data by working with the financial statements of real-world companies in real time. In less than two hours, you will be able to:

- Rapidly identify and organize key company financial data
- Understand what financial statements mean to the business, its customers and suppliers, to investors, and to you
- Assess a company's vital financial performance and health
- Examine management's goals, expectations and concerns
- Go beyond the numbers to consider a company's “value”
- Make informed judgments about a company's future

Harness a powerful tool for fast analysis.

You will also download and work with the *Quick View Financial Summary Worksheet*SM. This innovative tool enables you to create an instant picture of a company's financial health.
