"Perhaps thinking about the tax rebate in this way will divert consumers from focusing on the pain at the pump and current economic environment, and treat themselves to things they might not otherwise buy where the dollar can go as much as 20 percent farther," said UnbeatableSale.com President Mike Martin. "While the government is looking to boost spending, we're looking to boost spirits at UnbeatableSale."

"Previous studies in 2003 reflected that about a quarter of the recipients planned to spend their tax rebate, and in this case, UnbeatableSale online is ready when the public is ready."

In addition to the offerings at UnbeatableSale ('<http://www.unbeatable.com>'), the company's resources are devoted to developing additional unique and distinct niche marketplaces for those looking to uncover a low-cost bargain or replenishment item. Sites focusing on consumer electronics, and high-end kitchen and home decor consumers, yield to the public's need for speed and ease without loss of quality or value.

UnbeatableSale's extensive product line and buyer habit testing ensures consumers are receiving the maximum number of available products that suit their needs.

"Our clients are meant to understand when they come to the UnbeatableSale e-commerce site - our associates are responsive to meeting client-specific needs," concluded Martin. "UnbeatableSale transcends other players in the retail field."
