Comfortmarket.com, Technooutlet.com and Greatermedical.com put products into pleasant positions, online, for patrons

For Immediate Release

LAKEWOOD, N.J./EWORLDWIRE/July 23, 2008 --- Exhaustive product content is among the reasons consumers taking a seat - potentially literally - at their PCs, to get hooked up at newly available ComfortMarket.com, TechnoOutlet.com and GreaterMedical.com. A vast, unexpected product mix that includes items such as bathroom exhaust fans and radio-controlled helium blimps, puts the presentation of items at each site in the right place, in the right time and at the right price for consumers besieged by rising prices.

Although the vast majority of people spend the largest part of their budgets - by some reports, nearly 80 percent of their money - within 20 miles of home, for online properties such as the newly opened, niche sites from UnbeatableSale, it's the targeted catering to specific interests that's driving sales without any need for wheels.

According to UnbeatableSale's President Mike Martin, online retail sales growth is really about different kinds of buyers. Said Martin, "Casual shoppers do their legwork online, looking for the best price using the Internet, to save money. Others - which Forrester Research indicates possess a more affluent lifestyle - simply enjoy the convenience of shopping online and are not necessarily looking for the best deal.

"It's our objective, via these very targeted offerings, with depth and breadth of product, to reach everyone who can benefit from our range of goods and quality service."

Eli Fisher, UnbeatableSale's marketing manager, credits the company's ability to move forward to the design team behind its sites. "Over our four years working with them, the Web developers Eric Younge Studios have captured the essence of buyer usability, creating and delivering e-commerce to the public in unique and cutting-edge ways."
