New media technology pursuits lead him to multi-faceted experience

For Immediate Release

SUCCASUNNA, N.J./EWORLDWIRE/May 20, 2009 --- With the spring semester nearing its end, County College of Morris (CCM) student Jordan Federer has his sights set on the attainment of his associates' degree in June and moving into his career path. He began the transition by taking on an internship at World Internet Marketing Inc.

Federer's eager attitude to edit and design early in the semester put him in the director's chair, editing video and designing logos - in addition to assisting the office in more technical areas, troubleshooting the network and computers, and installing hardware and software.

While he's holding onto dreams of one day becoming a graphic designer for a video gaming company, Federer has spent time at CCM digging into the different aspects of his major, New Media Technology. Impressed by his eagerness and readiness to learn, CCM staff helped Federer uncover the internship opportunity.

"World Internet Marketing has put me back in touch with programs I haven't used in a while, such as Adobe Premiere," said Federer. "My background knowledge of design is being applied here, while giving me the chance to learn so much more about different areas of business operations."

With numerous graphic design classes behind him, Federer says that he is familiar with all of the latest technology and computer applications - and, he says, the more he's learned, the more he wants to learn, to further develop his design and editing expertise.

When not in class, Federer seizes every opportunity to gain new knowledge, and he is an avid gamer, staying current with the newest video games, books and movies. He makes learning fun by linking the love of the video game with his academic pursuits; he's even "played around" with producing music videos.

"The world of graphic design is a multi-player occupation," said Federer. "Being flexible and interacting well with others is clearly the way to win."
