

New Labor Reform Organization, The National Alliance for Worker and Employer Rights, Launches Website

The National Alliance for Worker and Employer Rights is the new paradigm for Labor reform.

For Immediate Release

WASHINGTON/EWORLDWIRE/Nov. 1, 2005 --- Built around the passage of Charlie Norwood's Secret Ballot Protection Act that allows freedom of choice free of intimidation in union elections, NAWER's mission is to bring dignity and the promise of freedom back to workers and employers, ending the tyranny of the Unions by protecting business growth and employee rights.

The National Alliance for Worker and Employer Rights is a fresh conservative voice on the Hill on behalf of our broad membership of workers and businesses in the United States. It pledges a replacement of unjust labor laws and legislative programs pushed onto the American people by ever more radical hierarchy of American labor organizations.

The end of the unions' overreaching political power is near, and NAWER will turn the battle for freedoms in the workplace.

More unionization spells the end of the free market.

Radical unions hold workers and employer hostage with their more and more radical political and social agenda.

NAWER, with its aggressive advocacy and grassroots coalitions, is an organization representing American workers and employers not satisfied with the status quo in Congress or in the United States.
